Samantha Myers is a 29-year-old criminal and retired marine living in Sandy Shores, San Andreas. Despite a difficult childhood, Samantha's resilience and determination have led her to success in business and service.

Early Life

Born in 1990 in central Los Santos, Samantha endured a turbulent upbringing marred by parental neglect. With her mother battling addiction and father imprisoned, she became the sole caregiver for younger brother Jovanni by age 12.

The daily struggle for basic needs and protecting Jovanni left little time for school or socializing.

Constantly stressed and sleep-deprived, Samantha dreamed of escape. At 17, she saw enlistment with the Marines as her only path to security while doing something bigger than herself. It was an abrupt but determined departure from her powerless situation.

Military Service

The structure and meaning Samantha found with the Marines gave her life needed direction. She felt part of a true family among fellow enlisted. Rigorous training honed her physical and mental grit.

From 2008-2012, Samantha completed three tours including deployments to the Middle East and South Asia. She saw heavy combat and lost many brothers-in-arms, sustaining both external wounds and deeper psychological trauma. The intensity forged unbreakable bonds with those who endured the same.

Despite the hardships, Samantha was awarded the Navy Achievement Medal for her exceptional conduct under fire. She exemplified honor, courage and commitment even in the hell of war. But no commendation could erase the pain witnessed.

The mental health impacts of Samantha's trauma overseas would only fully emerge later. But the marines did provide invaluable structure, skills and maturity to the young woman.

Return to Los Santos

After completing her service, Samantha returned to Los Santos in her early 20s. She formed a motorcycle club, the Midnight Riders, with fellow vets struggling to adapt. Riding gave them purpose and camaraderie reminiscent of their service days. They became both a makeshift family and an outlet for frustrations with a society that didn't understand them.

It was through connections that Samantha met Liam Cuttel, and learned that he's in the SAS. Their instant mutual attraction led to a passionate but ultimately doomed marriage. A year of turmoil culminated in an acrimonious divorce that granted Samantha ownership of Liam's neglected desert bar property.

Samantha invested profits from selling off Liam's luxury vehicles into renovating the once-ramshackle bar. Her vision, charisma and marine-forged work ethic slowly transformed the aging dive into the bustling Yellow Jack Inn. Despite Liam's mismanagement, she envisioned rebuilding it into a destination and community hub.

Today, Samantha splits time between managing Yellow Jack Inn and working as a mechanic at the Sandy Shores garage. She takes pride in her independence and self-sufficiency. Beneath Samantha's tough exterior remains a generous spirit with wisdom earned through hardship. Her presence enriches the Sandy Shores community.
