The Los Santos Fire Department (LSFD) provides fire protection, rescue services, and emergency medical care for the city of Los Santos, San Andreas. With over 4,500 personnel operating out of 80 firehouses, the LSFD serves 4 million residents across 503 square miles.

History

As Los Santos grew rapidly in the late 1800s, catastrophic fires became common in newly built neighbourhoods. The volunteer Bucket Brigade struggled to suppress blazes in the urbanizing city.

In 1889 the city government established a professional, paid fire department consisting of five engine companies. Over the next decades, motorized fire vehicles, additional stations, training regimes and alarm systems modernized the LSFD.

By 1950 the LSFD consisted of 300 firefighters operating 50 engines from 25 stations throughout Los Santos. Expansion continued accommodating the metro area's rapid post-war suburban growth.

Today the LSFD integrates state-of-the-art equipment with over 130 years of institutional knowledge protecting San Andreas' largest, most complex city.

Organization

The LSFD is divided into 5 geographic bureaus encompassing 80 firehouses distributed to ensure 5 minute response times across districts. Special units augment urban firefighting capabilities:

- Air and Wilderness Division - Provides helicopter and brush truck responses for wildfires in regional parks and open spaces within city limits.
- Fire Prevention Bureau - Oversees code inspections, permits, arson investigation and public education to reduce fire risks.
- Metro Rescue Task Force - Multi-agency unit trained in large-scale disaster response, such as earthquakes and terrorist incidents.
- Hazardous Materials Division - Specially trained teams equipped to contain releases of dangerous substances.

In addition to firefighting, LSFD responders provide critical emergency medical services, answering over 500,000 911 calls annually.

Training

Recruits undergo 26 weeks of intense training at the Frank Field Fire Academy. Coursework covers fire suppression, rescue procedures, paramedic skills, codes/regulations, and physical conditioning.

All LSFD members pursue ongoing professional development through courses at the academy. Training evolves with new techniques and risks arising in a dynamic urban landscape.

Chief Robert Garcia

The LSFD is currently led by Chief Robert Garcia, a 25-year department veteran. As the first Hispanic chief in LSFD history, Garcia has prioritized data-driven resource allocation, and community outreach to build transparency.

Under Chief Garcia's leadership, the LSFD continues to adapt its 19th century foundations to serve 21st century Los Santos through a commitment to inclusiveness, technology, and compassionate service.
